Laws of Life

Life is like a giant ferris wheel. No matter what, I can keep going up. But sooner or later I have to go back down. Good things happen in life that brings me higher and higher. Then there are those bad times that just bring me back down to where I had started. Have you ever been on a ferris wheel? Have you looked over the land and felt the sun beat on your back, the breeze slam against your face, and the fresh air scent tickle your nose? Like a ferris wheel ride, life is smooth and easy going, but if you rock the seat the ride becomes scary and unpredictable. To keep me together and strong I need my laws of life, confidence, humor, perseverance, and love.

As I mount my seat by myself and hear the owner shout to keep my hands and feet in at all times, the ferris wheel begins to rise, my ride just beginning. My first stop is confidence. The ability to believe in one is a great gift. For lacking confidence can be a huge risk. If I didn't have confidence in my personality, I wouldn't have friends. If I didn't have confidence in my education, I wouldn't have the will to learn. To have confidence means a lot. It means survival for life.

As I leave confidence and ride my way up to the top of the ferris wheel, I accompany my second stop, humor. Humor is always needed no matter where I am or what I am doing. This doesn't necessarily mean that I don't take things seriously, though. Humor helps others who are having hard days and it helps me when I have hard days. A best friend is always good for this. A great joke is always welcomed. It doesn't hurt a bit!

As my ride takes me down the ferris wheel, it is resembling how my life can be so great at one moment and take an unexpected turn, where everything goes wrong. Friends betray you. A loved one dies. Perseverance is needed in my life to succeed, to be able to pull through anything. As I am going down the ferris wheel, I look at the ground. How uninviting it is! Compared to going up the ride it's so tranquil and peaceful. Riding down can be lonely and afraid. During this time my ride needs perseverance, to get me through.

My next stop on this ride is love. As I plunge further, closer to the ground I think of all the love in my life. During hardships I need love the most. Plenty of hugs and kind words will do. I can find love anywhere I want to turn, from my family or my friends. Just to have someone to turn to that will say these encouraging words, "It'll be okay" is needed from time to time. Love is my last stop on my ride.

Its amazing, after my last stop, my life ride on the ferris wheel keeps going....smooth and steady. Up, down, and up again. Whether the parts of my life are awesome and make me feel invincible...there's always those bad times too. I'll always try my best and give life my all. I'll also try my best not to rock my seat, which will only make my life scary and lonely. Confidence, humor, perseverance, and love will keep my life ride going.
