

Hannah S., Grade 8,
Ripley Union Lewis Huntington Middle School, Ripley
Second Place, Middle School Division ($100)

Laws of Life

Life is like a coloring book. There are many pages, but none are the same. Each picture can hold many different colors. Some pictures have instructions to follow. If you don't color inside the lines, the picture may not turn out as you wanted it to.

The cover of my coloring book represents a preview of what's inside or a preview of what your life is going to be like. Inside my coloring book are pages. Each page is telling a step, decision, or event taken in life. The pictures on the pages are waiting to be colored showing the events waiting to take place.

Sometimes there are instructions on how to color your picture or it won't turn out just right. These instructions represent the rules in your life. The instructions also represent how sometimes you come upon something in life that you must do correctly or it won't be right. As a child, you are told to color inside the lines, but most young children don't. This is showing that when you are young you make more mistakes than when you are older and know how to stay inside the lines. Although sometimes it's still hard to stay inside the lines, it's good to have fun.

If you don't want your coloring book to be blank and boring, you need to add some color. Each color represents characteristics you have. Make sure you add a little of each color to each and every picture.

Red represents love; everyone needs love in their life. Blue represents determination; the more determination you have the better you will do in life. Green represents courage; courage to stand up for yourself, what you believe in, and to be your own person. Teal represents respect; respect yourself and others. Purple represents friendship; everyone needs friends to get them through the rough times and to have fun with. Black represents the struggles; the tough times in your life. Gray represents self-confidence; the more you believe in yourself the better you will be. Brown represents your decisions; you should always make good decisions because they will affect you later in life. White represents truth; you should always be true to yourself and to others. Orange represents your fun; everyone needs to lead a fun life. Yellow represents your family; you need to keep your family close. Pink represents responsibility; everyone has responsibilities they should take seriously.

The colors all put together on a picture combine to give your life an edge. You don't want a boring life. Even though you may color outside of the lines, it's okay to make mistakes. Everyone makes mistakes at some point in their life. If you learn from your mistakes, it makes you a better person.

As you color your coloring book, don't go too fast. You don't want to grow up too fast. So take your time color too fast or you'll get outside of lines and mess up your picture. If your mess up a few times, it's okay. Everyone makes mistakes which you'll learn from.

In my coloring book, there are a few pages filled, not anywhere near half, because my life isn't half over. Each colored page is bright and full of color. There is a little black, but I haven't had too many struggles. When I color my last page I won't be upset because when I'm old and I flip through the pages I'll have a flash back of all my memories, the good and the bad. I'll laugh at the times I cried and cry at the times I laughed. My coloring book will be full of color letting me know I lived life to the fullest. I'll look back knowing that I have no regrets and that's all that matters. So live your life to the fullest. Remember to take it slow. When you flip back, look at your memories, and see its full of color, you'll smile having no regrets. So remember, take it easy and add color to every page.

